

In 2018, the global hydrocarbon processing industry spent more than $50 B in maintenance projects. Since equipment failures can result in expensive unit or total plant shutdown, best-of-class companies maintain the mindset that investing to improve reliability and equipment conditioning is a great benefit to the organization. With dozens of new downstream processing units forecast to begin operations over the next few years, the pool of maintenance and turnaround projects will increase, as well. This includes thousands of units/plants already in production within the refining, petrochemical and gas processing/LNG industries. In 2019, billions of dollars will be invested to ensure that maintenance and turnaround programs are completed. These investments are an inevitable expenditure to ensure stable and safe plant operations.
